Harry Gould went into the game with fifty grand. And came out of it 30,000 light. But that was okay. He'd lost to Blackstone, who promptly keeled over with a coronary attack. It could have been worse—he could've lost to Bender. So when Frank "Stillwater" Bender bought Harry's marker it got worse—fast. "Harry," Bender said. "There's one important lesson I learned from Guido Sarducci, and that is to always have a fall guy to protect yourself. And you, Harry, are going to be our fall guy." Raymond Obstfeld is a novelist, poet and screenwriter. With more than twenty-five published novels in the mystery, suspense and western genres, he has created and written three successful series as well as having written for two other series.
