"What we need is a menu of men that we could order from. That would make things so much easier." "Absolutely," Dixie says. "With guys listed according to their appeal. Like some guys are merely appetizers, some are desserts." "And some," Diva says, grinning lewdly, "are full-course meals." "How about something like this," Trina says. "Beef Ribs a la Jack. Huge slabs of meaty ribs that take all night to finish." Barcelona laughs. "With juicy, buttery corn on a stiff cob. On the side." "That's the way I like it best," Diva says. Diva lays a twenty in the middle of the table. "Let's do it for real." "Do what?" Barcelona asks. "Make this menu. With men on it." "That's crazy." "No, it's not," Diva says. "We all know and meet lots of men. Some of them you're interested in, but some of them you're not. Maybe one of us would be." "This sounds a little like high school," Barcelona says. "Not today's high school," Dixie says. "It doesn't sound like high school," Trina says. "It sounds like business." Praise for Hungry Women... "Be careful when you pick up this novel, because you won't be able to put it down...women aren't just hungry. They're funny, raunchy, brave, and deeply human." - Elizabeth Villars, author of Lipstick on His Collar Raymond Obstfeld is a novelist, poet and screenwriter. With more than twenty-five published novels in the mystery, suspense and western genres, he has created and written three successful series as well as having written for two other series.
